Headline:
Increasing risk of some rain but turning drier overnight.

Today:
A largely dry and cloudy start for many areas with some short-lived sunny spells. A band of rain, heavy at times, arriving during the afternoon, slowly moving southwards and affecting most of the region. Rather mild with light winds. Maximum temperature 11 deg C (52 deg F).

Tonight:
Cloudy during the evening with outbreaks of rain tending to ease. Overnight, it will remain mostly dry with some clear spells developing. A patchy frost forming where skies clear. Minimum temperature 1 deg C (34 deg F).

Saturday:
A mostly dry morning with some sunshine. An increasing risk of showers through the afternoon, particularly in the east. Some of the showers could be wintry at times. Feeling chilly. Maximum temperature 9 deg C (48 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Sunny spells and a few wintry showers on Sunday. Mostly dry with plenty of sunshine for Monday and Tuesday. Feeling cold with overnight frost throughout.
